Morena's prediction for the morning is to make 5 to 10 dollars, which she refers to as "pesos."

"¡Ahi!" Morena points to a building where she goes every Sunday to collect recyclables.

"Ya Pasó," Another canner was here before Morena.

Chinese Canner

After walking for a few minutes among bagels trucks in a outdoor garage space, Morena looks a bit disappointed.

"¡Ay!" Morena yells to someone who is maneuvering the car in a wrong way.

"Somos demasiados," Morena complains about the number of canners while another chinese canner passes by.

Morena goes into a building to leave her recyclables with an old woman who keeps them for few hours.

Morena meets two friends who live in the neighborhood. They stop to chat about clothing.

She meets a friend on wheelchair and stops to exchange a few words.

"Ya Pasó," Morena realizes another canner passed in one of her spots.

I was surprised about Morena's knowledge on elegant dresses and accessories. This episode triggered the discovery of her "secret."

An acquaintance passing by.
